Panko is a variety of flaky bread crumb used in many cuisines as a crunchy coating for fried foods, such as onion rings. It is made from bread baked by passing the electric current through the dough placed in the plastic box of Baking Machine's Trolley, yielding bread without crusts, then crushing the bread into bigger sizes bread crumbs. It has a crisper, airier texture than most types of breading made by Extruder and resists absorbing oil or grease when fried, resulting in a lighter coating. Outside Japan, its use is becoming more popular in both Asian and non-Asian dishes: Japanese style Panko breadcrumbs are also unseasoned and they taste great as a lightweight, crispy topping on French toast.

So they are widely used in many cuisines and industrial seafood and meat food process as topping, breading or crumbing. We would like to recommend you our 40-1000 KG/H bread crumbs making machine continuous production line to produce Panko bread crumbs.
