1. Look at the Packaging

The packaging of a proper biscuit should include the manufacturer, factory address, telephone, implementation standards, ingredient list and shelf life, all of which are required by the state to be on the food. When buying, pay attention to check if the bag has these signs on it. If you buy biscuits that don't even have the most basic date of manufacture, then such biscuits are definitely irregular and unhealthy.

2. Look at the Channels

As a commodity, biscuits may be counterfeit, so you should choose to buy them from a regular channel when buying. Generally, large supermarkets are more stringent in buying biscuits, and the quality of the biscuits is guaranteed, so it is more reassuring to eat them.

3. Look at the Brand

Generally speaking, the quality of good brand biscuits is still guaranteed. It is best to buy biscuits under well-known brands, which are not easy to develop, and the quality control will be stricter, so the quality of the biscuits produced is also guaranteed, buy these brand products, buy some peace of mind.

4. Look at the ingredients

The ingredients are the core content of the biscuits. Generally, biscuits produced in accordance with national requirements and regulations will be on the label by the product ingredients list, generally the ingredients on the biscuits are flour or cereals, fats and sugars, yeasts and some additives. When buying, take a look for yourself at the composition of the biscuit.

5. Smell

A good biscuit should have the characteristic cereal-like aroma of biscuits and a fresh oil smell, while a biscuit smells heavier because of the additives and flavours added, the smell will be stronger and cover the natural taste of the biscuit, the oil may also be of poor quality and repeatedly used many times, so the biscuit produced is very unhealthy.

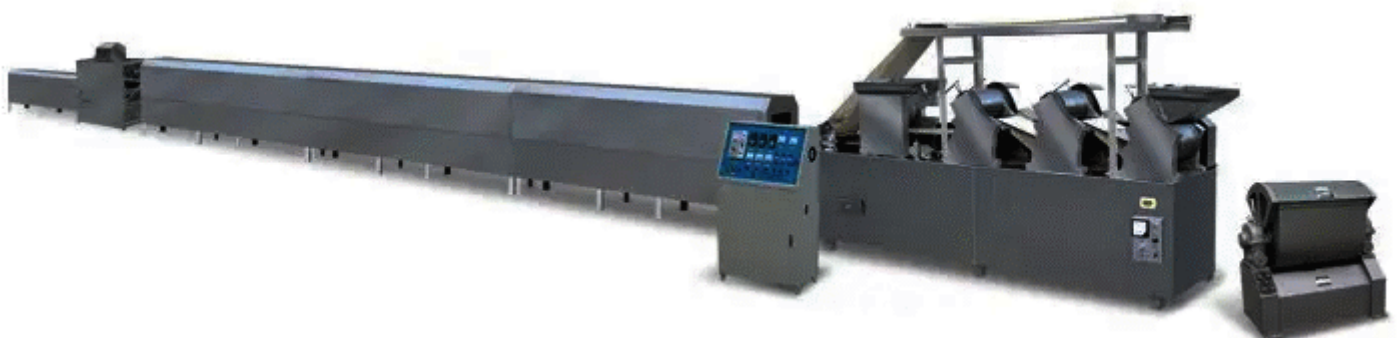

6. Taste

When choosing biscuits, some people think that the crispier the biscuit, the better, the crispier the biscuit, the better, some even think that the sweeter the biscuit, the better, but these are all incorrect perceptions. A good biscuit has a natural grain flavour, a pure sweetness, should not stick to the teeth, and should be relatively crispy and flaky.

Overall, to choose healthy biscuits, it is best to choose biscuits with less fat, lighter flavours and fewer additives. Biscuits containing vegetables, lighter salty and sweet flavours and lower fat content are better. Whereas soda biscuits are higher in calories and fat and should not be eaten in large quantities, whole grain biscuits can be used for filling up.
